government education subsidies and preferential treatment at the same time should choose one of them to apply.

Article 6

The survivors of the military and civil servants or school educators shall submit the bereavement payment order, bereavement order, bereavement compensation certificate, or other supporting documents issued by the Department of Defense, Ministry of Civil Services, or the competent education administrative authority when applying for preferential treatment on educational expense and shall meet the school-set deadline for application.

Article 7

The school that received the application mentioned in the preceding article shall submit the application to the competent education administrative authority for approval.

Once approved, preferential treatment will be granted until graduation.

Article 8

Among the various expenses for the preferential treatment, tuition and miscellaneous fees for public schools will be directly waived by each school. The remaining expenses shall be budgeted and supported by each school or the competent educational administration authority. Private schools shall be provided with budgeted subsidies by the competent educational administration authority.

Article 9

Students approved for preferential treatment in accordance with this Act shall cease the preferential treatment immediately if in any of the following situations:

1. Those who have legal grounds for losing or stopping receiving bereavement compensation in accordance with the law.
2. Those who take a leave of absence, drop out of school, or are expelled from school.

For students who take a leave of absence or drop out of school during the semester, the payment of staple diet and non-staple diet fees will be stopped from the month of leaving school. Fees that have been issued will not be recovered. However, when resuming or re-enrolling in school during the semester, the fees that have been issued before taking leave of absence or drop-ping out from school, cannot be claimed again.

Article 10

This Act shall become effective on the date of promulgation.
